The Devil All the Time reads a bit like Cormac McCarthy channeling Flannery O'Connor. That's not a fresh opinion; Pollock has drawn many comparisons to O'Connor. There are also comparisons to Jim Thompson and the casual, shocking violence has a flair akin to the Fargo television series or a movie by Quentin Tarantino.

The Devil All The Time by Donald Ray Pollock

The Devil All The Time is unbelievably, the debut novel from Donald Ray Pollock. I couldn't fault it in any area. This gritty, perverse tale of interlinked short stories flows seamlessly from one narrative into another, then back again. Written in the 3rd person narrative it is a deliriously twisted intensely gratuitously violent tale with deeply religious and Gothic under tones.
