The Domestic Economy of the Soul: Freud's Five Case ...

Without being a classical drive-theory Freudian, an ego or self psychologist, or a Lacanian, John O'Neill writes a book on Freud called The Domestic Economy of the Soul. One could perhaps place O'Neill's theoretical framework among those of the object-relations analysts of the 1920's and 1930's. These analysts believed, as does O'Neill, that psychic life takes its shape from the mother's body
