UNDERST ANDING INSTINCTS IS A USEFUL

STARTING POINT Organisational life is harder than it needs to be. We make it harder because, mostly, our leadership practices are contrary to human instincts.

Change is a good example. There is a saying that people resist change. While this might be conventional wisdom, it just isn't true. If people were hardwired to resist change, we'd still be living

The livable city is the freedom to own a car but drive it less. If you drive 5,000 miles a year, instead of 15,000 or 20,000, you can keep it three times longer and save about $5,000 a year. So, a livable community means the option of saving money. Or you can give up car ownership entirely and save even more, using your feet, a bicycle, transit, car-share, and/or car rentals at times.
